Hygiene in the hospital

Hygiene in the hospital

The protection of our patients is paramount. With the following hygiene measures we would like to protect patients against pathogens. Help us to achieve this goal by implementing the recommended hygiene measures.

Hands

The hands are the most important carriers of pathogens. That is why you should wash them thoroughly with water and soap:

- when entering the patient's room
- after changing a nappy or accompanying your child to the toilet
- after going to the toilet
- before the preparation of foods
- before eating
- if your hands are visibly dirty

If it is necessary to disinfect your hands, you will be instructed in hand disinfection by a specialist. This is necessary in the following situations:

- Your child is isolated.
- You undertake technical nursing tasks such as the administration of tube feeding with your child.
- You pump breast milk in the hospital.

The child's personal environment and hospital room

The bed with bedside table is part of the patient's personal environment and is only touched by family members and staff.

We ensure a clean environment with the daily cleaning of the patient's room. In order to make this possible, we rely on the fact that you fold your cot and place private objects to the side.

If you share the changing table with other parents, wipe it thoroughly with a moist disinfection wipe after use.

Signs of illness among visitors

Inform the responsible nurse if you feel ill or have signs of an infection. You will be informed about additional hygiene measures for the protection of your child and other children.

Sick siblings and sick visitors stay at home.

Many thanks for your cooperation!
